2. What are cookies?

Cookies are small data or text files that are stored on your local computer by websites. Such cookies may have different purposes: there are technical cookies (for language settings), session cookies (temporary cookies) and tracking cookies (cookies that follow your online behaviour, enabling the website owner to offer you the best possible user experience).

Section 129 of the Belgian Electronic Communications Act (Telecommunications Act conversion) contains a number of provisions about cookies and their use on websites. The Belgian implementation is derived from the European e-Privacy directive, which implies that the use of cookies and cookie legislation is regulated differently in each European country.

Item 7, "I'm not from Belgium. Does a different form of approval apply to my country?" gives an overview of how each European country implements cookie legislation.

3. What is the use of cookies?

CADskills wants to keep you informed about this new legislation and about the cookies it uses. Cookies help CADskills to optimise your visit to a website, to remember technical choices (e.g. a language setting, a newsletter, etc.) and to show you more relevant services and offers.

If you want to consult the website of CADskills, we recommend enabling cookies. If you do not like this however, you are free to disable cookies (see also under "How can I manage cookies?").

We use cookies to improve your visit to our website. The cookies we use are safe. The information we gather by means of cookies helps us to identify any errors, or to show you specific services, which we think may interest you. It is possible we store information directly related to you. We may also use cookies from carefully selected partners with whom we collaborate and who advertise our services on their websites.

4. What assurance can you offer visitors?
